

Sorry about that . .

THE man who pulled the plug on Eldorado has said sorry to its bosses.

BBC1 controller Alan Yentob sent a letter to the producers of the flop soap thanking them for their efforts and dedication.

Killing off the £10 million show - which ended earlier this month - was Yentob's first major decision after taking over the helm of BBC1.

He admitted it was a painful and unpopular decision to make but refused to change his mind even when ratings rose in the final weeks.

His first signs of remorse came in a six-line apologetic letter to producers Corinne Hollingworth and Verity Lambert.

ALAN YENTOB

TOP WEEKEND TV GUIDE - Pages 28 and 29